TOPIC: Legislature Protest of Bill 80

---

Patrick Book: Anchor

The politicians may have got the message loud and clear from today's sea of flags, banners and signs. It was protest day at the Legislature, as those angry at the Government made their voices heard. The majority were construction workers fighting against the Bill 80, the new law that would change the way their unions are regulated. Terry Parker heads the Building Trades Council and argues it will do much harm to the industry.

The apprentice may be a carpenter one day, and may be a boilermaker the next, and he'll never get in enough hours into the trade to actually become a qualified journeyperson.

Patrick Book:

The FSIN joined the protest, angry about the potential sale of environmental lands, as did health workers that are seeking a new contract.
