TOPIC: Bill 80 - Unionized labour industry trying to stop it

Alec Docking Anchor:

They're not ready to give up the fight. Saskatchewan Construction Trades Council is trying to stop or change Bill 80, the new law which would affect Saskatchewan's unionized construction industry.

Amanda Eyolfson Reporter:

The issue of Bill 80 isn't going away anytime soon, as the Construction Trades Council met with the Labour Minister. This bill changes how construction unions are organized and allows unions from out of province to come here. Council Manager Terry Parker feel bringing in unions like the Christian Labour Association wouldn't create a level playing field.

...which could handcuff our contractors and give it an unfair competition in the sector.

Amanda Eyolfon:

Parker hopes to get some response from the Minister within a month.
